Donald John Trump, an interesting fela. He is the president of the United States for the second time, and he has done some interesting things. I don't really like him, and these are going to be my reasons why I don't like him.

Past Behaviour

People might argue that his past behaviour doesn't matter, and one must only look at his present behaviour. This is because because people change like the tides in the ocean, and to judge them for who they were could prove to be a mistake.

This is a fair argument, however it is also fair to assume that there is also a chance he didn't really change that much. And if that is the case, then I am kind of worried. Because in the past Donald has said a lot of disrespectful stuff about a lot of people, and if these are still his true beliefs that could be troubling. For example when he said "I don't even wait. And when you're a star, they let you do it. You can do anything. . . Grab 'em by the pussy. You can do anything."

That is just... D: So yeah, he could have changed, he could have had some cool character development where now he respects women and doesn't believe that you can just grab them by the no-no square zone. But given that there was a civil case where he was held liable for Sexual Assault, and the way he continues to speak of women as less, and the fact that like 28 other women have said that he did bad stuff, and that he has had relationships with Epstein, it's just kind of improbable.

So that's my first point, he has said and done some bad stuff in the past, but what is wrong with him in the present????

DOGE

So one of the first things Donald did was collaborate with Elon to create the Department of Government Efficiency. It was meant to do some Milei-Style cutting of some useless governmental bodies. The idea is great, but taking a look at the execution, there are problems. The first problem is that they are cutting great educational bodies. Now I don't know of anything that had any DEI Terms such as "Trans" or "Diversity". There is evidence to support this - They cut funding to the NIH into research that mentioned "Auditive Diversity" which just means the subtly differences in hearing people have. This cut also included grants from the same branch that studied how to help people that suffer from hearing problems

- USAID programs were cut because they had the word "Equity", but it had nothing to do with the "Equity" that the woke people use. Apparently financial equity is an economics term. I wouldn't know I didn't do economics, and the DOGE clearly didn't do economics either.

-"Inclusion" and "Accessibility" in keywords in Education and Training related grants also seemed to be targeted. In total 373 Million dollars were cut from the department of education. Inclusion and accessibility are very important in the context of education. For people with disabilities like ADHD or Dislexya or Autism.

So they cut stuff that had DEI terms even though they might not have had anything to do with DEI. But furthermore, DEI is not bad in and of itself. It's meant to prevent discrimination from playing a factor in who gets to hire people. You could argue that it does unfairly penalize, it could lead to minorities having an advantage, but that doesn't mean anything DEI should be ctrradicated, only monitored or better managed.

So they claim that they cut like 215 Billion dollars but everyone basically knows that number is a lie. The American Enterprise Industry thinks the numbers are kinda fake.

The argument against this would be that despite sources proving otherwise, the number isn't fake and the government did sincerely cut a lot of programs off and save that amount of money. But given the fact that they cut off some actually reputable research programs with absolutely no evidence of them being a waste of money, I would still call this a fail

Tarriffs

I know it's kind of unfair to preface this section with this fact.

But according to STANFORD UNIVERSITY, 93% of economics disagree with Donald's decision to bombard so many countries with so many tarriffs like this.

Economist Paul Krugman says that tarriffs act essentially as a tax on American people. To quote "a tariff is basically a selective sales tax — foreigners do not pay it, whatever Trump may say. U.S. consumers pay it" - Paul Krugman

According to Yale, the tarriffs were significantly more negative for lower income households "The price level from the Yale Budget Lab simulation goes from 3% in the short run, the equivalent of an average per household consumer loss of $2,100 in 2024$. Annual losses for households at the bottom of the income distribution are $980 under the April 2nd policy alone." - Yale's Budget Lab

Now I know what you are thinking, I'm quoting too much without doing my own analysis. That's because I never took a class in economics in my life. I have no idea what financial equity even is. So all I can do is rely on these economists and hope that what they say is true. But now I'm in the future. So was it true????

It turns out that the taxes didn't impact the economy as negatively as most economists thought, but they claim that this was because Donald mostly backed off the more extreme tarriffs.

Also, a little story, my father sells organic goods to the US, and while Donald was on his woke Tarrif arc, he was rendered completely discombobulated. Because even if Donald's tarriffs weren't a good idea, his execution was terrible, he would announce tarriffs one day, change them the other, completely cancel them in some cases. My father was changing his plans all the time, and I imagine other corporations had the same issues. It was all very disorganised and messy.

Not to mention that Donald used tarriffs basically as bargaining chips for other political purposes. I just think Donald went a little crazy with the tarriffs for no particular reason, and he overall destabilized the entire economic landscape for no concrete reason of what he was actually going to do. Still I'll only count this as a half-claim because even though everyone i've talked to about this agrees that the tarriffs were done badly or they were a bad idea in and of itself, i still don't know much about economics. There is a theory that Donald was intentionally manipulating the market to make money for him and his rich friends who had insider information and stuff but I don't know about that. It's just a theory.

ICE

So that's the whole other thing. The RIGHT WING seems to have this narrative that the feckin immigrants come to the countries and they fuck everything up. The decrease demand for minimum-wage jobs, thus kinda decreasing the minimum wage in a sense, and they also increase crime because most immigrants are poor.

Thus Donald's main campaign was that he was going to deport evil violent immigrants that ruin society and commit crime. So he funded the shit out of ICE and now ICE is literally going on about arresting people and sending them to detention centers and deporting them, and occasionally killing random people.

Okay but now let's look at the D-tails of this whole thing. One of my friends once told me that pro-capita, immigrants committed more crimes in the US than the general population. I have no idea how that got the idea from, I guess I should actually go to reliable studies I've heard that is not the case. The main conclusion of the studies are that Undocumented Immigrants do NOT increase the amount of Violence/Violent Crimes/Crime, just terrorist in the US. I hate it when articles just say "My according to the studies" yeah no shit, what studies? Here are the studies I'm referring to

If you search those up in google you can find them, they are all publicly accessible. I love it when NHS just gives you these studies for free instead of locking them behind a paywall.

The NBER study actually says that immigrants are 60% less likely to commit crimes!!!

And the other papers agree that increases in undocumented population do not have a significant correlation with increases in violent crimes. So this basically disproves the entire narrative that immigrants are coming to the US and will rape your dog or whatever. That is, unless I just forgotten to look at the only 4 studies that are against the grain that are basically just Bad Science.

Also it's safe to say that the conditions of the detention centers are sub-optimal at best. Sometimes people that were in the US legal choose to self-deport themselves just to get out of those detention centers faster.

So a lot of people disagree with ICE because of their kinda racistish and violentish behaviour towards immigrants. Thus ICE has become less popular and many people quit ICE in protest. This prompted the government to basically lower the standards for who can and can't join ICE. This basically shortened the training period and made it unnecessary to speak spanish to some extent, which used to be a necesity since most undocumented immigrants are mexican.

This is obviously worrying because police training is absolutely essential for forfending situations where some random individual gets illegally detained. A lack of training can also get you some dangerous situation that lead up to unnecessary deaths. Such is the case with Renne Good and Alex Pretti.

Worst of all, the Donald's Administration didn't immediately condemn the killings of Good and Pretti. They didn't immediately dismiss this as an unfortunate isolated event that shouldn't have happened, and they didn't take responsibility. Instead they put the blame mostly on Good and Pretti, but the blame isn't on them!!! The blame is on the untrained officers who used LETHAL FORCE when that LETHAL FORCE was absolutely undisputedly NOT REQUIRED.

There was literally nothing to gain in that situation from the usage of lethal force. It behooved absolutely no one to pull out a gun and shoot it, in both of these scenarios. And any properly trained Police officer with basic police training would know that. However ICE seems to be lacking this very basic training, which leads to more unreasonable detentions, searches and seizures, and even deaths apparently.

In conclusion, nothing about ICE makes sense to me. If most of the crimes don't come from immigrants, then the government should not focus on the immigrants, they should instead improve the normal police and go after the native criminals.

But given that this was in Donald's campaign, he had to focus on violent undocumented immigrants. But even then, he did a terrible job, by causing the unlawful detention of thousands of people. He put a lot of people in terrible situations because of his poor management skills. That's what I think.

Also the whole thing with Kilmar Abergo Garcia where he was detained a billion times and Donald's Administration sent him to el Salvador, but then brought him back, and then they tried sending him to Africa, and eventually he ended up in the US but then he* and after a long and arduous legal and apparently political battle, bro finally was free.

And the best part is that on Febuary of 2026 a judge ruled that ICE is so incompetent that he ordered him which is the funniest shit ever.

Honourable Mentions

Now that I have gone through what I believe has been some pretty solidly objective reasons as to why I don't like Donald over here, I will go through some less-well-researched reasons. Reasons that I am perfectly fine for people to disagree with, and I am open to somewhat changing my mind/stance on

-Israel V Palestine: Donald has been an avid supporter of Benjamin

I personally think that Benji's administration killed a little too many innocent lives, more than what they should have been okay with. Like, I understand kill any innocent life, but I understand that under the circumstances presented, maybe Benji had the idea that causing the death of palestinian innocent lives was better than risking the death of Israeli innocent lives, mainly because killing innocent lives, according to Benji, is a necessary sacrifice for also causing the death of Hamas members, thus saving the aforementioned Israeli lives. But with a 50% civilian casualty rate, and also the fact that they killed more than 5 times the people that hamas killed, it just seems kind of unjustifiable to support. Even if the heart were in the right place, I think that the execution was overly brutal, therefore I chose to support anyone that opposes this unnecessary violence. These being the protestors against Hamas, against Benjamin, and by Proxy against Donald Trump.

-Ukraine vs Russia: I put this here because one of my very smart and trusted individuals that currently resides in the United States of America once told me that in Biden's administration, the Ukraine and Russia conflict was nearing it's end, however Donald came along and fucked it up. Given this conflict is still going, I personally believe that Donald hasn't been doing a very good job. But that's why I am still open to discussion, because I have only heard about this from once source, given that he is a very smart and successful entrepenur with a lot of financial and political influence who is very well educated on subjects and stuff, I refer to him as THE BLACK ONE, but yeah, it's still only one source, prone to be extremely biased.

-I don't like how he often lies/exagerates things in his speaches for theatrical purposes. And pretends to be his know-it-all genius that everyone praises. "You know, no one knows more about [Blank] than me, ask anything you want about [Blank] and I'll tell you, I am an expert" and stuff yet I believe he actually knows a lot. He also claims he was capable of being an olympic swimmer in a race, just because the olympic swimmer was a woman??????? Like wtf, Donny, my guy, brouhton, You damned mothrfeckin individual, come.....on.

OBJECTIVE CLAIM OUT OF NOWHERE

Trump revokes EPA finding on greenhouse gas threat in huge blow to climate change regulations

This is probably the biggest issue we are facing as a species right now, like the ultimate battle for/against humanity. Donald thinks somehow revokes a finding??????????????????????????? How does one revoke a finding??? This shit has been so rigorously proven, it's goddamn unassailable, the fact that greenhouse gases are bad. And I haven't looked into it, but I am so goddamn sure that Donald didn't provide any scientific counter or analysis to revoke this finding, he just revoked it because apparently the whole shebang of science having to be empirical so that it can always approach the truth is actually a pain in the ass and inconvenient, which allows studies having to always be subjected to some extremely mad rigors in order to make sure that the stuff is not tainted by bias or human subjectivity means jack shit when its injected into politics because a blonde guy with brain worms just yell at and fire people who don't like him, I guess we are to waste the money of the government, money that could otherwise be spent in more pertinent issues like killing palestinians, or more recently, iranians, or deporting Immigrants and occasionally killing US Citizens and giving them a heck of a lot of trouble just for not having been born in the US. I am sure very glad that Donald cut all of those deals and funds to all those medical reasearch universities and stuff to utilize all this money responsibly.

I got a little carried away there with the subjectivity, obviously he isn't doing terrible stuff on purpose. I'm a little worried how Donald source said that he would never go to heaven no matter what he did. It's just that the guy doesn't even give off good guy vibes. And I really don't like his opinion on women and how they are like worst than men. Even though he is as disrespectful to women as he used to be, I still get the feeling anything change, I feel like instead he just hides it better. Plus I heard he pardoned a lot of bad people, and yeah, just overall yeah.

So that was it, those are my objective reasons I don't like Donald. mainly because he is kind of discriminatory towards women and because all of his actions, even if assuming that they were a good idea in the first place, were terribly executed. And given that he is currently in the position of the EXECUTIVE BRANCH of the US, I would say that is his most important job, and he failed. Also he didn't get congressional approval to start a war with Iran but now this shi is getting too long so time to wrap it up
